

SURVIVORS OF THE CIMBRIA.

The Arrival Here and the Graphic Account One Gave of his Experience.

Ten survivors of the wreck of the Cimbria arrived here yesterday by the steamer Westphalia of the Hamburg-American line. Eight were men, and the others were a woman and a little girl. Three of them—Albert Attendorf, his sister Emilie, and Josef Curtis—were second-class passengers on that vessel; while Franz Pliska, Robert Schutte, John Hentsch Peter Kisijski, Joseph Kortko, John Moshul, and Chaje Schmuhl were in the steerage. The last named is a pretty little girl, only 6 years old, who was on her way from Germany to her father in this country when the disaster occurred. Her father was lost, but by the kindly care of a sailor the little one was saved. When the Westphalia arrived at her wharf in Hoboken yesterday morning, hardly had the gangplank been made fast when the child's father rushed upon deck and clasped her in his arms, uttering words of affection and thanksgiving in a broken voice, while tears of joy ran down his cheeks. The other members of the rescued party quickly scattered, two or three going to friends in this city and the others to Castle Garden, where they left their baggage, while they strolled about to see the city or busied themselves making good their claims against the steamship and the railway company. For the time being, all American men and women were there. Fireworks were exploded and gongs and drums were beaten for an hour beneath a tall pole, from which the colors of the railway were flying. The festivities ended with a banquet.

Franz Pliska, one of the sailors, a sturdy-looking young fellow from Prussia, Germany, said: "I was asleep in the steerage on the Cimbria when she was run into by the English ship. I awoke to find myself adrift, and was unable to swim. I was then picked up by a sailor, who took me to shore. I was then picked up again, and was all the time screaming to me to save her children, and, clutching her by the hands, I told her not to be afraid. I had little hope of saving myself. We could see the English vessel, the Suttim, a little way off, pointed right at us, yet for I saw both her smokestacks. She came up to us, and we were saved."

During the day Captain John Smith, of the Cimbria, came to the station, a sturdy-looking man, who was dressed in a sailor's suit, and who said:

"I was asleep in the steerage on the Cimbria when she was run into by the English ship. I awoke to find myself adrift, and was unable to swim. I was then picked up by a sailor, who took me to shore. I was then picked up again, and was all the time screaming to me to save her children, and, clutching her by the hands, I told her not to be afraid. I had little hope of saving myself. John Smith, a sailor, who is about 30 years old, and is possessed of an appearance, has three children.

ONE MAN'S PERIL.

Deserting His Wife and Duping a Young School Teacher Into Marriage.

ST. LOUIS, Feb. 8.—Charles Shores was a salesman in a large show house in this city, and lived with his wife and 5-year-old child at 1390 Morgan street. He was a gay young man, and a general favorite among his associates. He got acquainted with Miss Mary Craig, who kept a private school at Channing avenue and Olive street, which school was considered the most aristocratic private school in town. Miss Craig was reported to be possessed of considerable means, and she and Charles Shores had been under the name of Shores. He was a constant visitor at the house where she boarded, but no one there ever suspected that he was married. Orla had invented a hitherto unknown process for softening his brass plates in order to impress them, and for subsequently flattening them so that they would not rattle.

Chief Dennison believed that he had found the man, and that Miss Craig was waiting to be married, and that Miss Craig was waiting for Miss Dennison to go to New Orleans to come and take the man away. She was a widow, and Charles Shores had told his wife that he had changed his business, and was going to travel for a time, and that he would return to Newark, New Jersey, when he had earned enough money to marry his wife and carry her away. That evening, at about 5 o'clock, he drove up to Miss Craig's boarding house in a Frenchman's club, and climbed up to the top of the madam. He was saved.

A little bit afterward the water gull all the way down to the pier, and she had to make a long straight night, and the water was rising, and was all the time screaming to me to save her children, and, clutching her by the hands, I told her not to be afraid. I had little hope of saving myself. We could see the English vessel, the Suttim, a little way off, pointed right at us, yet for I saw both her smokestacks. She came up to us, and we were saved."

A lot of people had got on the deck, and when the vessel settled down over a big wave came and washed them all into the water. The water was cold, and we drifted about, and had to swim to the boat.
